Title
South Dakota Indian Reservations Today—Native Students.

Grade Level
Adult workshop for Native inmates.

Theme

Duration
1½ hours.

Goal
Participants will increase their understanding of the geographical locations and differences among the tribes living on the South Dakota reservations.

Objectives
Workshop participants will know:
1. The number of reservations in SD.
2. Which tribes live on those reservations.
3. Where the reservations are located.
4. Which two reservations are the largest in population and which reservation is the smallest.
5. Which bands live on which reservations.

South Dakota Standards

Cultural Concept
Participants should recognize the diversity of the SD reservations.

Cultural Background
The reservations in South Dakota are populated by the seven tribes of the Oceti Sakowin, The Seven Council Fires.

Those tribes, who began as one tribe, are now divided into three major language dialect groups: the Dakota, the Nakota, and the Lakota. They are often called the Sioux.

According to their oral tradition, they originated as a people at Wind Cave in South Dakota and have always lived in that general area. At the time of European contact, the people lived in Minnesota. The word Dakota means “Considered-friends.” Before they separated, the Dakota lived in the area around Lake Mille Lac in Minnesota, where they would come together for winter camp. Over time they separated into the Oceti Sakowin “Seven Council Fires” as they traveled further away to hunt and no longer camped together in the winter. The tribes came together periodically for ceremonies. The seven sacred ceremonies are the basis of differentiating these tribes from other tribes, which do not have all seven of the ceremonies.

Student Activities
1. Prepare a flash card for each reservation (tribe) containing the name of the reservation, its location, which dialect is spoken there, which of the seven tribes of the Seven Council fires is located on the reservation, what the land area is for each reservation and what the population is on each reservation. Give one flash card to each of nine participants from the group.
2. Prepare a flash card for each of the Seven Council Fires including the reservation on which they live and give a flash card to eight participants in the group.
Multiple cards will needed for the Teton, as shown below, to show the seven nations of the Teton.
3. Have each participant holding a reservation’s name read the information from his card and then stand in the part of the room where the reservation is located assuming the classroom represents the State of SD. Have the participants with the band names from the Seven Council Fires go stand next to the reservation where they are located. The seven nations of the Tetons are located on the reservations west of the Missouri River.
4. If time permits, after portraying the geographic locations and the bands located there, ask the nine reservation participants to arrange themselves in the order of land size for each reservation and announce to the class their land size. Next ask them to arrange themselves by population size on each reservation and announce their population size.

Resources
Flash cards for reservations (tribes), the seven nations of the Oceti Sakowin, the seven Lakota (Teton) nations, and a map of South Dakota showing the locations of the reservations. See the additional information section.

Assessment
1. Provide a map of the State of South Dakota showing the reservations without the names and a list of the reservation and ask the group to match them.
2. Ask the participants to call out something new they learned during the exercise.
3. Ask participants for suggestions on other topics that might be useful for a future workshop.
4. Ask if there was anything presented they thought needed further explanation.
